Help Establish Another Staple Crop In The Glades—Rice

Dr. Victor E. Green, native Louisianian, now of the Experiment Station, is of the professional opinion that the muck lands of the Glades possess the natural advantages for production of a superior quality rice in per-acre quantities greater than Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas at an equal or less cost.

Three Texas growers who are now preparing land for August rice planting and three others who have rented land now being prepared for their planting, are enthusiastic in appraisal of level land, availability of water, fertility of soil and ability to grow two crops per year. These Texans account for more than half of the 2000-acre fall crop.

The savings to the rice farmer by a true cooperative are the profits Texas and Louisiana rice growers are accustomed to see accrue to the advantage of the drier, storage and mill operator back home.

THE GLADES RICE GROWERS COOPERATIVE is composed of some 27 growers with a charter and by-laws legally acceptable to the Farm Credit Administration and eligible for loans.

A site has been obtained, engineers employed to furnish plans and specifications on buildings, drier, storage bins, mill and other processing facilities, and more than sufficient acreage pledged to operate the plant to capacity.

Rice processing plants are money makers in Texas, and Louisiana and Cooperatives are highly successful in Arkansas, according to the Bank For Cooperatives and other bankers.

Government reports show that South Carolina, Georgia and Florida consume approximately 30% of the rice eaten in U. S.; Cuba and the Islands are major exporters of American rice with Florida holding substantial advantage in freight rates.

I. L. Price, President of the local Co-op accompanied bankers on a ten-day tour of Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas, securing actual figures on costs of typical rice processing plants, cost methods of operating.

Turner and Johnson, Texas rice growers, with two years experience in Florida, collaborated with local farmers in estimating costs to produce a rice crop locally with the aid of experienced men in growing, drying, milling and selling.

W. C. Bamford, CPA has compiled these figures into proper form for presentation to banks and the public as average in production and full as to costs and contingencies, with a consequent conservative prospectus of operations.

Each farmer or group is financing his own crop growing and in addition is making a uniform per-acre investment in the plant.

A total needed capital investment, after anticipated first mortgage loan of $65,000, has been more than half subscribed; some thirty odd thousand is open for non-grower investors.

It is customary to pay 6% on this needed capital, with interest and return of capital to come from SAVINGS from the Co-op, AND a uniform per barrel "retain" by the Co-op.

Any amount from $100 up will be accepted and Certificates issued by the Cooperative.

WE HAVE THREE FIRM OFFERS EACH AGREEING TO TAKE ALL THE RICE WE CAN PRODUCE, IN FLORIDA.

The following figures from Mr. Bamford's financial prospectus are for information:

FARMERS' ESTIMATED NET RETURNS:

	Government Support Price	Present Day Market Price
Selling (20 barrels per acre)	$204.60	$272.40
Farmer's cost to produce, (including land rent), harvest, dry, store, mill, bag and sell	145.20	145.20
NET PROFIT TO FARMER per acre—one crop	$59.40	$127.20

ESTIMATED INCOME TO COOPERATIVE:

Gross Income, retained by Cooperative from sales, from combining, drying, storing, mil- ling, bagging and selling	$244,000.00
Total estimated cost for above operations, in- cluding upkeep and depreciation	169,875.00
ESTIMATED NET SAVINGS, available for in- terest and refunding of invested capital, after reserve for depreciation	74,125.00

Juvenile Authorities Lay Blame Juvenile Delinquency This Is Common Sense . . .

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY AS SEEN BY A JUDGE

RICHARD P. ROBBINS
West Palm Beach, Fla.

Down through the years criminal law has relied upon the threat of punishment as the method of resisting criminal inclinations, but as a practical matter, insofar as the juvenile delinquent is concerned, punishment by incarceration in penal institutions, as a method of control, has proven ineffective.

An inspection of youthful prisoners in five states disclosed that seventy per cent of them had been previously convicted and served out their terms.

Juvenile Courts, in which cases of law violation, involving children, are heard and determined, are a recent development in jurisprudence. The first of such courts was established in Chicago as late as 1899. The purpose motivating their creation is to more effectively protect society and the youthful offenders by substituting for retributive punishment methods of training and treatment directed toward the correction and rehabilitation of children who violate the law; to assure to them the care, guidance and control, preferably in each child's own home, which will conduce to its welfare and the best interests of the state and to assure that a child removed from the control of its parents will receive the care, custody and discipline as nearly as possible equivalent to that which it should have been given by the parents.

The purpose of juvenile court law is to save children from prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanor and crime and to prevent the stigma which attaches to a criminal record. To this end these courts endeavor to guard and protect incorrigible children against themselves and evil-minded persons surrounding them; to see to it that they are trained both physically and morally. They become the guardians of children within their borders for the purpose of imposing wholesome restraints upon their activities; to check criminal tendency in its inception, and to protect them from improper environment and influences.

The trial of children for criminal law violations in the juvenile court is more in the nature of an inquiry than that of a legal contest. It is a hearing in which the judge may gather facts as to all of the conditions surrounding the life of the child. His primary function is to seek out the underlying cause of the misconduct in each case in order that an intelligent disposition may be made. The new juvenile law empowers him to order examinations of the child made by medical, psychiatric or psychological practitioners where such examinations are needed to arrive at a just conclusion as to where the fault lies.

The judge of the juvenile court does not administer criminal law. The child before him is not a defendant. There is no conviction or sentence with its consequences of life long stigma. The juvenile court judge administers equity and the child, still immature and unable to take his place as an adult before the law, receives guidance and protection as well as correction. The judge is not an umpire or arbiter. He recognizes that each child brought before him is a significant individual with an individual need. He represents his county as paterfamilias, who may act with the parents, or when necessary, in place of them. He has a wide latitude in rehabilitating the child in its own family, to bring about more desirable behavior. Each case presents to the judge an opportunity to bring into play all of the resources at his command. Most important of these are the court's counselors who investigate the cases, gather together the pertinent data and supply for his consideration a complete case record of the family life of the child, his habits and the character of his associates. Since we are no longer dealing with children as criminals there is no necessity for quick decisions. Adjourning of hearings from time to time gives the judge and the court counselors a better opportunity to investigate the forces which are influencing the child's behavior, enabling the court to render such judgment as will best conserve the interests of the child and the welfare of the community.

As there is no single cause of delinquency it follows that there is no panacea for its correction. The remedy for one child may be a complete failure in a similar case of another. Children who come before the court range from those who, out of temporary discontent or a desire for adventure, become involved in serious misdemeanors, to those who suffer emotional deprivations in their relationship with their parents. To determine the proper remedy in each case is the problem of the judge.

Are YOU To BLAME?

For The Alarming And Growing Juvenlency On You!

Are You Responsible?

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY AS SEEN BY AN 18-YEAR-OLD BOY

If a child is to be cured of juvenile delinquency, they must be shown some type of enjoyment to take its place.

The real fault falls upon the neglect of the parents and the church. They both have scared the child away because he or she thought it was sissy to be good. It all begins in the home where the parents have strayed away from the kind of lives they should live. Sure they take the child to Sunday School, but where do they go—home to bed or an easy chair. You ask them why they don't go to Sunday School and Church and what do they say—Oh, we can hear the sermon over the radio and I read my Sunday School lesson last night.

We expect the Church in the community to help the younger generation—but how can it, if the young people are not there to be helped. As they grow up and see the lack of interest the adults are taking in Church Services that is when so many lose interest and begin to look for entertainment in other places. But what if all the Churches closed its doors, who would be the first to gripe?

That night what do they have for dinner, probably some beer and sandwiches or some other day of the week they (take a quickie) where Junior can't see it. No, he can't see it but has a very sensitive nose, that can smell alcohol a mile away. When he is old enough to go out at night where does he go? Straight to some place where he can smuggle some cigarettes and a bottle of beer with his week's allowance. He doesn't like it at first, but if Dad can do it so can he. He grows older, say sixteen, he begins dating and what type girl will he date? Well you can bet your bottom dollar she is no Church girl. She soon learns how to smoke and later on to drink. However if she doesn't learn it from the boy she will learn it from some other girl, sooner or later.

They follow the same rule as Ben Franklin did. We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall hang separately. They ask nothing nor do they give anything. They have their own commandments—thou shall steal (for it is the only way you get what you want)—thou shall commit adultery (who wants to wait until they are married)—shall bear false witness (he would do the same thing to you if he could) thou shall covet,—(if they know the truth we'll get in trouble) thou shall use God's name in vain, (what's his name compared to mine). Thou shall kill—(if he won't dim his lights I won't dim mine) thou shall forget the Sabbath Day and keep it unholy (what is the difference between it and the rest of the week)—thou shall not honor thy father and mother (they're about the dumbest people I know). They never have heard the first two commandments—: Thou shall love the Lord Thy God with all Thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength, and with all thy mind. Thou shall have no other Gods before me. (The new hot rod Charlie has down the street). Thou shall not make any graven image or likeness of heaven above or earth and sea beneath, and the second is like unto it — Thou shall love thy neighbor as thy self.

All these things may seem cruel and hard, but they have happened because the parents did it and got away with it.

The only way to teach your child the right way of life and the correct Ten Commandments; take them to church, read the Bible with them every day. Try your best to stop the evil things you do, such as cursing and drinking. You mothers stop worrying, have more faith, and above all, even if your preacher can't preach the gospel the way you want it done, don't tell everyone else, because they may love him the way he is. This goes for your children as well as other people. The reason the church is to blame is because it does not appeal to the youth. Oh, sure they have many youth gatherings, but who comes—the bad boys and girls? not on your life. The Christian who goes to church every time a meeting or social is called.

I am an eighteen-year old boy raised in a Christian family, always knowing right and wrong. I am planning to study for the ministry.

Think it over though, your kid may seem a good child to you, and at the same time a devil to every one else he knows.
